

Kimberly Moore-Jumonville, Ph.D.
Associate Professor of English

Work: Chair, English Department, Spring Arbor University
106 E. Main Street
Spring Arbor, Michigan 49283
(517) 750-6692 / kmooreju@arbor.edu

EDUCATION

Ph.D. in Nineteenth Century Studies/English Literature, Drew University, Madison, New Jersey, 1991
Dissertation: A Reappraisal of the 'Weaker Sex': Conventional Morality and the Quest for Female Identity in the Novels of Thomas Hardy
M. Phil. in Nineteenth Century Studies, Drew University, Madison, New Jersey, 1986
B.A. in English, Seattle Pacific University, Seattle, Washington, 1981

TEACHING EXPERIENCE

Associate Professor of English, Spring Arbor University, 2000-2002
Associate Professor of English, Taylor University, 1997-2000
Assistant Professor of English, Taylor University, 1992-1997
Adjunct Instructor of English, St. Ambrose University, Davenport, Iowa, 1990-1991
Instructor of English, European Nazarene Bible College, Busingen, (West) Germany, 1986-1987

PUBLICATIONS

Looking Our Hearts in the Face: Love's Scrutiny and the Problem of Integrity in the Novels of Dorothy Sayers. Mars Hill Review 18 (2001): 43-52).

COURSES TAUGHT

Romantic Literature
Victorian Literature
The Novel
Representations of Gender in Literature
C.S. Lewis and Friends (team taught)
World Literature
College Writing
Literary London

TEACHING AND RESEARCH INTERESTS

George Eliot, Thomas Hardy, Charlotte Bronte, C. S. Lewis, Dorothy Sayers, Nineteenth Century
Novel, Twentieth Century Multicultural Literature

Kimberly Moore-Jumonville brings an expertise in nineteenth-century British literature to the classroom. In her teaching she emphasizes the significance of world view, the power of the word, and the importance of Christian scholarship in a postmodern literary world.